Ethiopia's Ambassador to the United Nations says his country has a zero-tolerance policy for sexual crimes and anyone found responsible for the despicable acts will be held accountable to the fullest extent of the law. He was speaking to the Reuters news agency after a detailed humanitarian briefing at the UN revealed that more than 500 rape cases had been reported to five clinics in the country's Tigray region warning that the actual numbers were likely much higher. Staff from Médecins Sans Frontières last week reported seeing Ethiopian soldiers shoot dead four male civilians after ordering them off a bus near the regional capital Mekelle.
